Joan Horsfall Young – On Water

In her latest exhibition at TAG Gallery, Joan Horsfall Young explores the earth's most sacred natural resource, water. Our precious commodity is becoming increasingly scarce. Have we taken it for granted? Are we being punished for not paying homage to it?

In her exhibition entitled On Water, Young synthesizes these ideas with quotes from ancient and contemporary writers and transmutes them into paintings that document the beauty and utility of our delicate resource. Social gatherings on the still waterfront, the power of the ocean's mighty waves, and the tenderness of a romantic moment reflected on the shimmering lake are all documented in Young's canvases as testament to the might and versatility of water.

Suppose a tide came only once every fifty years. What a flurry of excitement there would be. Imagine the scramble there would be to pay the price of admission to witness such an event.

Water is good; it benefits all things
So let us give nature a chance...
She knows her business better than we do.
